THE GENERATIVE PROJECT WORKSHOP

Course description and Objectives

This course will introduce students to the idea of writing as a long-term process. We will look at poems by a wide range of poets who engage in self-generating projects; we will look particularly at the city as a generative element in those projects; and we will look at this phenomenon as a way to approach our own writing. There will be daily readings that examine different methods of generating writing, including poems by Percy Bysshe Shelley, Claud McKay, Matthew Zapruder, Anne Sexton and many others. The class will consist of in-class and take-home writing exercises based on the readings for the week, and discussion thereof. By the end of the course, students will have developed their own extended, generative project to carry them into the Unknown.

Requirements

Your grade will be based on:

- In-class participation, including attendance. This is 75% of your grade. This means being an active participant in our discussions and doing the writing exercises.

- Turning in 5-7 critical, analytical questions on each of the readings. 25% of your grade. Not questions like “how many pages long is this?” but more like “how does writing in series affect the choices the poet makes?”. As a guideline, use the general topic for each class to guide your questions. Be analytical, look closely at structure, methods, techniques, etc. I’ll hand out a sample
