

From the Stacks: Animal Studies

A brief newsletter to let you know what new resources and programs are available to you through the library.

January 2012

Have you seen the New Animal Studies Research Guide? I've just compiled a new guide that focuses on the many resources available in the Bobst Library that are related to the emerging field of Animal Studies. In addition to this new guide, we have 200+ research guides that cover different areas of study. The guides are created by the NYU subject librarians and they highlight some of the standard and new resources covering the specific subject that are available through the library.

To access the guide for Animal Studies visit:

<http://nyu.libguides.com/animalstudies>

As you plan for the upcoming semester, let me know if I can create a specific page within the guide to highlight resources for your individual course. The guide can then be linked to your Blackboard course page so students will have direct access to the resources they need for their individual research projects.

Also, any feedback on the guide would be appreciated!

Not happy with the quality of the resources your students are using for their research papers?

Contact me so that we can schedule a Library Instruction Session! The information landscape has changed drastically and students often have a difficult time understanding how to access relevant resources for their research assignments. A library instruction session will help students feel more comfortable using the library and enable them to locate appropriate resources for their research papers. Kara and I can offer students a general session regarding the library and some selected resources, or we can tailor the session to a specific assignment. If you have specific resources that you would like your students to become proficient in using, we can shape the session around those resources. Alternatively, if you have no room in your syllabus for a library session during class time, I would be happy to schedule an open research session for your class outside of class time.

Laurie Murphy, Acting Librarian for English and Comparative Literature
laurie.murphy@nyu.edu 212.998.2603

Kara Whatley, Life and Environmental Sciences Librarian
kara.whatley@nyu.edu 212.998.2624