The Action Research Internship (ARI) is based on active partnerships between CAS and LS students, faculty, and host organizations. The hosts bring specific challenges or concerns for which they need help; the students provide that help, with faculty guidance. The overall goal is to teach students how to use their academic training to assess and diagnose real-world problems, and how to propose feasible solutions that fit host organization needs. There is a mix of academic research/writing and fieldwork. For the summer 2017 ARI, students choose to work on either “zero waste” or “green infrastructure” in New York City and produce a proposal or plan for future action. Students do not have to find an internship on their own; the positions are already set up and ready to be filled. Please email the instructor, Professor Robin Nagle, at robin.nagle@nyu.edu for permission to register.
