Projects

- Public Books, Founder, Editor in Chief, 2012-present.
Designed and founded Public Books, a digitally-native, daily essay review forum where scholars engage in vigorous debate about works and ideas that deserve timely, intensive discussion. Building, editing, and developing Public Books marries my research on the dynamics of new technologies and institutional change with a mission to bring scholarly depth and rigor to a highly educated public. Currently, Public Books attracts an average of 15,000 readers per week.
- Chicago History Museum, Project Director, Trading Families Oral History Archive, 2007.
Conceived, directed, and conducted interviews to establish an oral history archive that documents the role of Chicago’s futures trading families in the city’s agricultural and financial derivatives exchanges. The 30-subject archive focuses on neighborhood and ethnic connections between families and trading, links between Chicago’s futures marketplace and regional agriculture, and more recent developments in electronic trading and the globalization of futures markets.
