

Post-Doctoral Psychology Plan To Begin at N.Y.U. Next Month

3-Year Program Will Include a 12-Course Curriculum in Psychotherapy

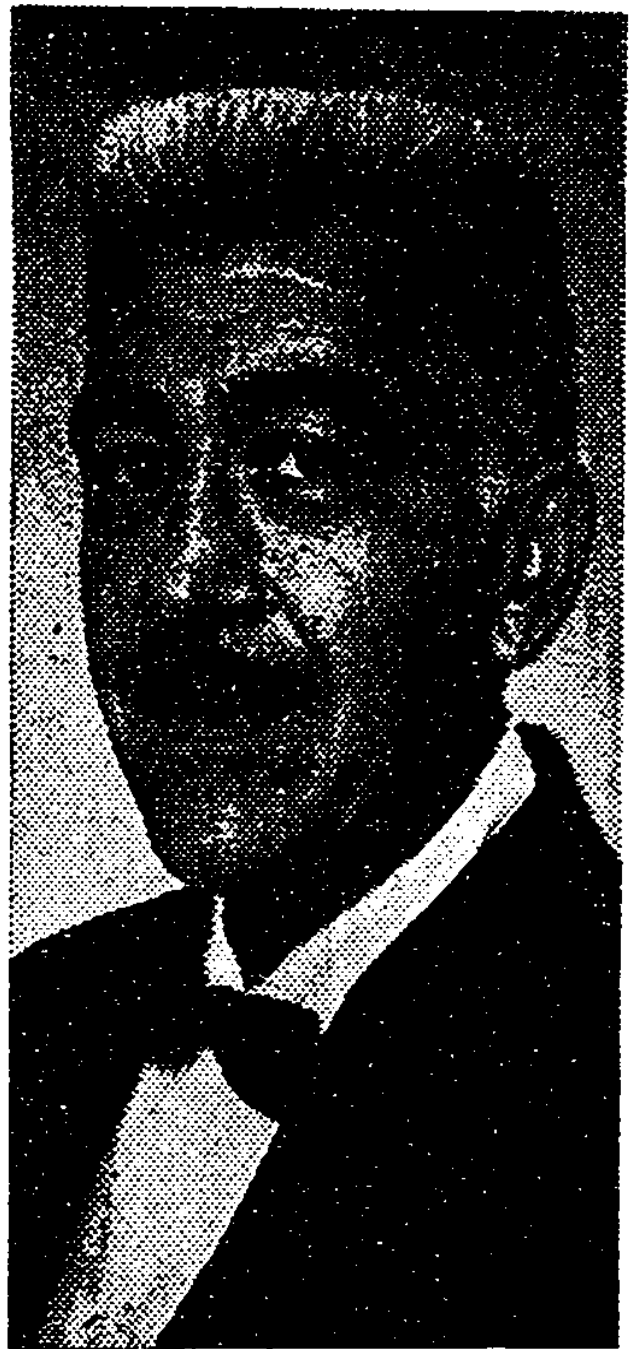

New York University will establish a post-doctoral program in psychology next month.

Dr. James M. Hester, dean of the Graduate School of Arts and Science, announced yesterday that the program would consist of a clinical and modernization courses. Dr. Bernard N. Kalinkowitz, coordinator of graduate training in clinical psychology, was named acting director.

The program will be part of the graduate school. Its faculty will consist of members of the N. Y. U. Department of Psychology and of outside psychologists, including Dr. Erich Fromm, Dr. Rollo May and Dr. Ernest G. Schachtel.

The clinical program will consist of a clinic and a twelve-course psychotherapy curriculum over three years. It will be open only to persons who have had two years of supervised experience and who have Ph. D's in clinical psychology from an institution accredited by the American Psychological Association.

The clinic will provide intensive training for specialists in psychotherapy. It will also offer free psychotherapy to a limited number of persons who have been unable to afford private treatment.

The modernization program is designed to help psychologists keep track of recent developments. It will offer courses in general, industrial, clinical and social psychology and will be open to persons who are certified as psychologists by the state or who have Ph. D's in psychology.

A special research center will provide independent psychologists with consultative services, research space, special equipment and other aids.
